LETTER TO OUR SHAREHOLDERS

In many ways 2008 was a unique year, not only for Alamo Group but for the world as a whole. The first half of the year saw unprecedented inflation in steel, fuel and commodities, which challenged both businesses and consumers. And then, beginning in the third quarter, we witnessed equally unique declines in commodity pricing and the stock market, the collapse of the financial sector and soaring unemployment. Yet despite these incredible developments, it seems as if 2008 is already forgotten as everyone is focused on the uncertainty of what 2009 will bring.

For Alamo Group, 2008 was a good year as we made strong progress in growing our Company, improving our operations and creating greater flexibility to deal with the rapidly changing environment. Some of this progress is evident in the record level of sales and adjusted operating profit we achieved in the year. We also continued to implement our acquisition strategy, and in May 2008 we purchased Rivard Developpement SAS, a leading French manufacturer of vacuum trucks, high-pressure cleaning systems and trenchers. Rivard was accretive in 2008 and also broadened the range of infrastructure maintenance equipment we can offer to governmental entities and related contractors in Europe and complements similar products we offer in North America.

As the year moved on, much of the progress we made was obscured by deteriorating global economic conditions. Rapid inflation in the first half of the year detracted from our improvements in efficiencies, growth in our international earnings was diluted by changes in exchange rates, and declines in the stock market eroded our market value, necessitating a $5 million non-cash goodwill impairment charge in the fourth quarter.

Excluding this charge, full year earnings increased 25% to $1.56 on record sales of $557.1 million. While many of our improvements have enabled us to hold our own in a difficult environment, the challenges in the marketplace have not allowed us to fully progress in the way we believe we are capable. Nevertheless, the progress we made during 2008 will help us better face the challenges of 2009.

For 2009, we are assuming overall economic conditions will remain difficult and we believe the markets for our products will be soft throughout the year. However, we feel Alamo's outlook will be better than many sectors of the economy. Our agricultural products, both in North America and Europe, should benefit from healthy levels of farm activity despite declines in commodity prices. Farm incomes, while down from record levels of the last few years, should still be reasonably strong and will further benefit from declines in input costs such as fuel and fertilizer. Additionally, the amount of acreage under cultivation, again while down, remains at a healthy level that will create demand for new equipment purchases. That said, there will certainly be other external factors that could impact ultimate demand such as credit availability and weather conditions, particularly the drought conditions that are still affecting many areas in the southern U.S.

We believe demand for our Industrial products will also continue at a reasonable level. These products are sold mainly to governmental entities and related contractors for maintenance along roads, right-of-ways, airports and other public infrastructures. Certainly, budgetary constraints and declining tax revenues will affect spending at both local and national levels. But, as we have seen during other economic downturns, the need for this kind of maintenance will continue—and this should create at least a basic level of demand for new purchases of our products, in both North America and Europe.

We also believe the progress made by the Company in the last several years in streamlining our operations and improving our efficiencies will assist us in meeting the unpredictable economic conditions going forward. The basic structure of our Company, including our geographic diversity, broad range of products, level of spare part sales, financial strength and leadership position in many of the niche markets in which we participate, should help us to deal with the challenges of our markets.

We are also being proactive in adjusting to changing market conditions. We are working diligently with our vendors to control costs, adjusting our staffing levels to mirror changes in production levels, varying our work schedules to ensure that we manage our inventory levels appropriately, constraining our capital spending, and focusing on debt reduction, among other actions. We have also implemented select salary freezes at many of our units and at the corporate level as well, until we see how this year develops.

We feel these actions and many others we are taking will not only help us get through these difficult times, but will also make us a leaner, stronger company that will be poised to benefit greatly when our markets begin to improve. Regardless of when the turnaround occurs, we believe our customers can count on us to be there throughout as a reliable supplier of quality products and aftermarket support both today and tomorrow.

Lastly, we would like to take this opportunity to thank our employees, our customers and shareholders for their continued support during these challenging times.
